

Clean Yamuna After a Decade in Gokul, India

April 18, 2020

While entire India is locked down from March 25th, the Rivers of the World (ROW) Foundation volunteers in Gokul village observed a great/unbelievable change in the Yamuna River Water quality. Yamuna has been flowing with over one foot of foam and dark colored water before and now flowing as a live river again with her original Himalayan color. The ROW volunteers mentioned that their local people can now do their traditional 'Achman' 🙏 (pulling up two palm-full of water and chanting mantras) and then drink that water directly from the River, a traditional and historic practice which they could not do for years because of the toxic/dark/dead water.

Cheers!!! for the Rivers and prayers for the thousands of people impacted by the COVID-19 pandemic all over the world.
